

LSAT STUDY BEST PRACTICES

from a 180-scorer!

- The LSAT is the single most important part of your admissions file. The right score can change your life.
- DO NOT allow this opportunity to slip through your fingers.
- Resolve that you will do everything in your power to achieve your best score.
- Leave enough time in your admissions cycle to take the exam twice.

What is the most effective study schedule?

- If possible, set aside 20 hours a week for 3-4 months.
- Two longer study sessions per week, about 6 hours each.
- Several shorter, 1-2 hour study sessions per week.
- One rest day per week. (Don't burn out!)

How can I get the most out of prep tests?

- Make sure you understand why you answered any questions incorrectly. Don't move on from your prep test until you do.
- Also flag any questions you don't feel confident about. You will want to understand the reasoning behind the correct answer, and make sure your reasoning matches theirs.

What are the best conditions for taking prep tests?

- Sit at a desk or table (not a couch or bed).
- Take your practice exams at the same time of day you plan to take your actual exam.
- Use the same tools you plan to use on test day. For example, I always used unlined computer paper and wooden #2 pencils when I was practicing.

I can't afford an LSAT tutor. How can I improve?

- Online forums are an excellent source for answer explanations. Google the first line of LSAT passages you don't understand.
- Join a student study group. Reddit's r/LSAT is a great source of study buddies, as well as tips.
- Older used textbooks are a solid alternative. I used books from 2008 and scored a 180 in 2019.

Reach out for help! I am passionate about providing students with affordable LSAT prep courses. Private tutoring is also available.
Interested in upcoming FREE events and resources? Text your email and I'll keep you in the loop!

brought to you by:

ALIYAH LSAT

252-LEVELUP